

JAN 5 2000

Hello -

I hope you get this letter safe. The reason I am writing you is because I want to ask you if you will please return my belongings to me. I know you know where all my CDs, clothes, and jewelry are. These things were bought with my money, and since we are not together anymore, you really don't have any right to keep them. Even if we both get out of jail one day, we will not be together, so these things are not yours to keep. I don't want to hurt you in any way or cause you any harm. I did not tell the truth to try to hurt you or to get back at you, I'm only trying to do what's right. Please tell me where my things are so that I can have someone get them for me. In return, I will give you back your clothes + tapes that I stole from you. You must know in your heart that it is not right for you to keep my possessions from me.

Sincerely,

James
